The end result of the "just one more thing" is that it has now been estimated that physicians spend two hours of computer work for every one hour that we spend in seeing patients. This is obviously a recipe for disaster as this pulls doctors away from the real patient care that drew us into medicine as well as pulling us away from our families who are a source for "healing the healer".

Just one more thing. Really? So on Thursday (yesterday) I went to the hospital's cardiac services division and got a Zio Patch put on by a nurse. The tech is pretty cool. It's "a small adhesive wireless device worn on the chest for up to two weeks...[and is used] in detecting abnormal and potentially dangerous heart rhythms."Please note that that's not me in the picture.
