Noncanonical writings are early Christian documents that are not found in the New Testament. The list of writings in the New Testament are known as a canon, a term that comes from a word meaning "measuring stick" or "rod." There are many different canons in different religious and even literary traditions; whatever list of writings a particular community considers authoritative ...

The Jewish attitude toward these books was quite different from that of the Christian Church. Before the time of Jesus, they did not consider 1 Enoch, 2 Maccabees and the like to be inspired in the same sense as Jeremiah or Kings, as evidenced by their writings, and by their use (or lack thereof) by Jesus.
